

inside JUSTICE

Are you interested in understanding our criminal justice system in a more nuanced way?

Experiencing various aspects of it up close?

Appreciating the human element of it?

The Stanford Criminal Justice Center (SCJC) is launching a new series called “Inside Justice” to give small groups of law students the opportunity to experience various aspects of and processes that comprise our criminal justice system. These opportunities will include police ride-alongs; visits to local jails, state prisons, and juvenile detention facilities; and attendance at specialty courts, criminal sentencing proceedings, appellate hearings, and lifer parole hearings. For each trip, an individual faculty member will suggest background readings, lead the visit, and debrief with the group of students afterward.

Two visits will be scheduled each of the three quarters. During the Fall quarter, all visits will be scheduled on Friday afternoons. Stanford Law School students may sign up for no more than one visit per quarter and should be mindful of their class schedules so as not to conflict with class time. If more students are interested in attending than there is space, a lottery will take place to determine priority. Academic credit is not available. For more information, contact Debbie Mukamal at dmukamal@law.stanford.edu.

next visits:

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 6
1:00 PM

MISDEMEANOR ARRAIGNMENTS: PALO ALTO COURTHOUSE

Professor Ron Tyler and Lecturer Suzanne Luban

15 students

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 13
1:00 PM

SANTA CRUZ JUVENILE DETENTION FACILITY

Professor Bill Koski

15 students

FALL
2015