

Terry Goddard

Arizona Attorney General (2003 – 2011); Phoenix Mayor (1984-1990)

Terry served as the Arizona attorney general from 2003 to 2010, addressing major issues ranging from the fallout from the mortgage crisis to border security and money laundering, protecting consumers and the environment. His fellow attorneys general saluted his anticrime successes in 2010 with the Kelley-Wyman Award, the National Association of Attorneys General's highest recognition. He was the Democratic nominee for governor of Arizona in 2010.

From 1995 to 2002, Terry was the Arizona state director for the US Department of Housing and Urban Development. During that time, he was elected to the board of the Central Arizona Water Conservation District, representing Maricopa County, and served as a public member of the board of the Federal Home Loan Bank of San Francisco and as a trustee of the National Trust for Historic Preservation. He was elected again to the CAP Board in 2012.

Terry was elected 4 times as the mayor of Phoenix, serving from 1984 to 1990. In that role, he was recognized for dramatically increasing citizen participation in city decisions and initiating successful efforts in downtown development, long range planning, crime prevention, arts and culture, and historic preservation. Terry conceived and presided over the Phoenix Futures Forum, the largest city visioning process in the US measured by the number of citizen participants and comprehensive scope. Terry was elected president of the National League of Cities in 1988 and was named "Municipal Leader of the Year" by City & County magazine the same year. Phoenix was recognized as an All-American City in 1989.

Terry served an active duty tour in the US Navy and retired as a commander after 27 years in the Naval Reserves. He has taught graduate courses on encouraging public engagement in government decisions at the ASU College of Public Programs and on urban design at the College of Architecture and Urban Design. He is an advisor to the National State Attorneys General Program at Columbia Law School. In 2012 he was named a Wasserstein Fellow at Harvard Law School. He is a Distinguished Advisor to the Morrison Institute on Public Affairs. Terry holds a bachelor's degree from Harvard University and a law degree from Arizona State University.

Terry lives in downtown Phoenix with his wife Monica, high school student son, two dogs and an undetermined number of cats. (Dec, 2015)
